

Columbia Symposium on China's Energy Needs

Posted by Super G on April 19, 2006 - 10:45am in The Oil Drum: Local

Topic: Demand/Consumption

I happened to be up at Columbia yesterday and I saw a poster for this event:

The Second Annual Weatherhead East Asian Institute China Symposium
Feeding the Giant: The Domestic and Global Impact of China's Energy Needs

The Columbia Center for Chinese Economy and Society at the Weatherhead East Asian Institute, along with our co-sponsors at the Harriman Institute, and the Center for Energy, Marine Transportation and Public Policy are please to announce open registration for the Second Annual China Symposium.

Friday, April 21, 2006
Columbia University
International Affairs Building
Altschul Auditorium (4th Floor)
420 W. 118th Street
NY NY 10027
9:00AM - 5:00PM

Abstract below the fold.

China's burgeoning economy has created increasing demand for reliable supplies of energy and is affecting the security, policies, economy, and environment of the East Asian region and the world. During this year's full-day China Symposium, part of the ongoing programming of the Columbia Center for Chinese Economy and Society, renowned scholars, policymakers, and members of the business community will examine the consequences of China's quest for energy.

The symposium will feature four panel discussions highlighting China's energy policy, international security, the domestic impact of China's energy crisis, and the economics that are impacting both the region and the global marketplace. It is the goal of the symposium to present the most current and useful scholarship on China's energy issues to an audience of interested scholars, students, business professionals, and community members.

Follow the link for more info.

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike 3.0 United States License.