I wish I could go to this, but alas my day job will keep me away:

New York University School of Law will host a panel discussion on the future of U.S. oil on Thurs., Oct. 20, 4-5:45 p.m. at NYU's Tischman Auditorium, Vanderbilt Hall, 40 Washington Square South (betw. Sullivan and MacDougal Streets). Participants include the following: Jeffrey Sachs, director of the Earth Institute at Columbia University; James Woolsey, former director of the Central Intelligence Agency; Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour; Roger Altman, former deputy secretary of the treasury; Charles Fox, New York's deputy secretary for transportation, energy and environment; and Amory Lovins, CEO of Rocky Mountain Institute. The event will be moderated by NYU Law Dean Richard Revesz and chaired by Jeffrey Tannenbaum, president of Fir Tree Partners. Participants will discuss investment opportunities in the transition from oil dependence, the role of energy in national security, the role of defense in leading technology advances, and the legal and regulatory implications of a transformed energy sector.

Other attendees include more than 200 leaders of the business and finance community, legal community, and government and academia in the New York area. The event is co-hosted by Fir Tree Partners and Rocky Mountain Institute, which published Winning the Oil Endgame: Innovation for Profits, Jobs, and Security in 2004.

Reporters interested in attending the event must RSVP to James Devitt, Office of Public Affairs, at 212.998.6808 or james.devitt@nyu.edu.
